Indicators Soar 2.1% In U.S.

But Analysts Cite Year-End Factors In Big Increase

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispute WASHINGTON - The U.S. government's main gauge of future conomic activity rose a sharp 2.1 percent in December compared with November, the higgest gain in almost four years, largely because of temporary increases in building permits and borrowing.

The rise in the Commerce Department's Index of Leading Indicators, which is designed to predict economic activity three to five months ahead, was the fourth in as many months and followed a revised 0.9-percent gain in November. The November rise had originally been reported as 1.2 percent.

But analysts, who had been ex-pecting a strong December performance, cautioned against reading too much into it. They said the December figure reflected several temporary factors, such as a yearend rush to beat changes in U.S. tax law, rather than any significant long-term economic rebound.

In separate reports that provided more apparent good news for the government, the department said Tuesday that new orders for nonmilitary goods rose 4.4 percent in December, the best showing since September 1980, while the U.S. housing industry had its best year did little to help the dollar, which alid again Tuesday. (See Page 15.) The December advance in the leading indicators was the largest since a 3.1-percent gain in January 1983, when the U.S. economy was beginning to pull out of the 1981-82

The biggest influence on the index came from a huge increase in building permits. But this largely reflected a rush by builders in California to obtain permits before higher fees took effect on Jan. 1.

Another influential factor was a large rise in business and consumer countering a Communist move-credit. Analysts said consumers sought to take advantage of salestax deductions and corporations bought capital equipment before

Debate on SDI Shifts to 1972 Treaty Critics Challenge Washington's Reading of Soviet Stance

The U.S. plans for SDI have become a sticking point in the Gene-va arms talks, where Soviet negotiators have insisted on a strict view of the treaty, and American negotistors have argued for a more permissive interpretation.

Zionist Spy But One Report Says Seib Will Be Freed Soon Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche NICOSIA - Iran's official radio said Tuesday that Gerald F. Seib, the detained Wall Street Journal correspondent, was being held as a "spy of the Zionist regime."

The South-North News Service, a U.S.-based organization that specializes in covering developing countries, reported Tuesday that Mr. Seib would be freed within 48

A dispatch from its Tehran correspondent, quoting a source in the Iranian Intelligence Ministry, said that Mr. Seib was expected to be released to the Swiss Embassy and to leave Iran on a regular Swissair flight to Zurich.

The dispatch gave no immediate explanation for the decision. The Tehran radio report was the first instance in which Iran officially confirmed the arrest of Mr. Seib.

He was detained by the Iranian authorities on Saturday night. Mr. Seib, 30, was one of more than 50 foreign journalists invited to Iran last week for a tour of the war front with Iraq. He had spent 10 days in Iran before he was seized. Following his detention, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said that a "spy of the Ziouist regime" had been arrested after entering the country with a false passport and disguised as a jour-nalist. It did not identify the person by name or nationality. Tehran radio said Tuesday that Mr. Seib was the "spy of the Zionist regime who had come to Iran disguised as a journalist."

A Foreign Ministry spokesman in Tehran, asked if the U.S. request that Mr. Seib be freed had been made through the ministry, replied, "I haven't heard anything."

The spokesman said Mr. Seib carried a U.S. passport, "but intelligence anthorities say it is forged." Street Journal had said that such allegations were false.

Warren H. Phillips, chairman and chief executive of the newspa-per, said Monday efforts were be-ing made through diplomatic channels to gain Mr. Seib's release.

The Swiss Embassy in Tehran, which has handled U.S. interests since Washington broke relations with Tehran in 1980 following the takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, declined to comment on Mr. Seib's case. (AP, Remers)

State Department appeared aimed at avoiding an exchange of charges with Tehran that might make it more difficult for the Iranian authorities to let Mr. Seib go promptly, The Washington Post reported from Washington.

A State Department spokesman, Charles E. Redman, said there had been no information through official channels of any formal charges filed against Mr. Seib. The Swiss Embassy "is protesting Seib's de-tention and demanding his imme-diate release," Mr. Redman said. He declined to call Mr. Seib a bostage or to categorize his situa-tion, adding that "the most I can say now is that his detention is simply unwarranted."

Raising Funds Early For Wide-Open Race

Fund raising for the 1988 presi-dential races will be hectic for both Republicans and Democrats because, for the first time in generations, neither party has an obvious favorite and because the number of early primary elections has been increased

Although the general election is almost two years away, The New York Times says potential candidates already face crucial decisions about raising the millions of dollars a campaign costs. Experts say it will take $3 million to $6 million just to finance races leading up to the first primaries in early 1988.

And, they say, fund raising will be more fragmented than ever. Competition for contributions will be "fierce," according to Mitchell E. Daniels Jr., who resigned this week as the White House political director. "This is the first election in the modern age with really an open nomina-tion in both parties."

Fund raising also has to start earlier because of the bunching of primaries and party cancuses ear-ly next year. At least a third of both parties' delegates are expect-ed to be determined by the finish of "Super Tuesday" on March 8,

Shultz Policy-Making Role May Be Fading

By David K. Shipler
New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz's emigmatic role in the Iran affair, and his attempts to dissociate himself from the operation, have raised questions about how much influence be will have in shaping foreign policy during the last two years of the Reagan administration.

Taking a 'Native Job:' Change Can Be Jarring

By Sherry Buchanan International Herald Tribune

LONDON - After one year as the first foreigner to be administra-tive director of Le Cordon Bleu, the French cooking school in Paris, Gregory Usher is leaving his job. "It was a satisfying but frustrat-ing experience," Mr. Usher, an American food consultant, said of his time at Le Cordon Bleu. Even though Mr. Usher has been living in France since 1970 and considers himself well adjusted, switching to a French work environment was more difficult than he had anticipated.

"There was a tremendous amount of bureaucracy and, al-though they hired me because they wanted change, they were then am-biguous about it," he said. "Even though I was expecting a different environment from the one which I had worked in previously, it still took me by surprise." Mr. Usher is about to open a cooking school for an international hotel in Paris.

Going native in the employment market, even for the well-initiated who have spent years in the foreign country and consider themselves well integrated, can be jolting.
In joining a foreign company, the outsider lacks the traditional networks that help him to adapt to the work environment. There can also be substantial differences in style and language. Differences in salaries can also make the move less rewarding. But, according to international ment recruiters, salary differences in some industries are decreasing between countries. This is encouraging people to move around more freely, especially for the top level

Takamatsu, Hirohito's Brother, Dies

By John Burgess

TOKYO - Prince Takamatsu, 82, a younger brother of Emperor Hirohito who argued for modera-tion during World War II, died Tuesday in Tokyo of lung cancer.

As a naval officer, Takamatsu is widely believed to have counseled the emperor that things were going badly in the war in spite of claims of progress from the militarists.

The prince was fifth in line to the throne. His death further thins the ranks of the imperial family's older generation, which was educated under the notions of semidivinity and forced to re-adapt as mere symbols of the state after 1945.

Like most Japanese dignitaries, Takamatsu revealed little of his personality to the public. But he is remembered for the occasional dash of humor and informality. On turning 70, he requested the free

During World War II he served as a naval instructor and on the headquarters staff. He is generally believed to have argued again with the United States and then to have worked to end it when victory became clearly impossible.

Takamatsu has been quoted as saying after the war that at the time of the Battle of Midway in 1942, in was inevitable because Japan had now have to think about how to end the war," he said. "I expressed this left and right."

Controversy occasionally touched him in the post-war years. In 1973, a dispute occurred over his plans to make a private visit to vessels of the Maritime Self-Defense Forces, as the navy is known. He canceled it. Under postwar custom, the imperial family has no contact with the military.

ONDON — Molière was the great playwright of monoma-ma. You might say he was obsessed with it. This may explain why Anglo-Saxons have never liked him. Take "School for Wives," the latest arrival at the National Theatre. It is about a middle-aged man so afraid of being cuckolded that he plans to marry a young girl whom he has trained up for the purpose since childhood. Oh yes, says the British playgoer, very intriguing, what else are we told about him? The answer is, nothing. The play shows him being comically disillusioned. Un-huh, what else does it show? Nothing. Well, what do the other characters get up to? There are no other characters, just foils to the protagonist.

Ben Jopson was the nearest thing to an English Molière. He too was fascinated by fanatics but each of his plays offers a stageful of them. His mechanisms are complicated and often messy. This is because he was, like all English playwrights, a remantic, half in love with chaos. Molière, like all good classicallyminded Frenchmen, worshipped order. His plays are very clear. Someone — a friend or an outspoken maidservant — tells the hero in the first scene how blinkered he is prophecy in action.

The single-mindedness can be brasing. "School for Wives" is a one-joke play but the joke is inge-niously told. Arnolphe, the wouldbe husband, has brought his in-fended up to be phenomenally naive, on the theory that sophisti-calion would get her into trouble. French comedy of the 18th century But of course her innocence doesn't stoo her from falling in love with the first young man she sees. The fact that she tells Arnolphe all about it, and that her beloved mis-Takenly confides in him as well, is more fascinating dramatist, with a no bar either. It merely adds to the flock of modern French revivals to confidently through it, making the audience gasp and gurgle at each fresh discomfiture. A great comedian might wriggle more inventively or just more individually; even at his most sophisticated Molière was still writing scenarios for clowns. Nobody else acts with any distinction. As the voice of reason Roger Lloyd Pack, who can be languidly brilliant, goes through the play like a man nursing a private joke. Otherwise Di Trevis's production has charm. The play suggests that Ar-nolphe has immured his bride in the suburbs. This show goes him one better and moves her right out for himself to play Harlequin, to the country, where servants are which he does in full traditional yokels and landscapes are pictureary and with teeth-clenching covvenge, though at the end it relents and offers him grace. That seems to the piece something of the thermober the idea, but it would take richer statically-controlled warmth it be, but it still requires a passion es to make it a reality.

The Gate, an adventurous pub theater in West London, has mounted "The Triumph of Love," which is about a princess going into man's appared to win her love. Shakespeare had the same idea, often, but what he hinted at in "As You Like It" and "Twelfth Night" is here made manifest. To gain her man, our heroine has to charm his male and female guardians, and so — alternately concealing and reveal-ing her sex — she does. When she emerges for her happy ending she leaves a row of bruised hearts and shattered prides behind her.

The latest is "A Yorkshire Tragedy," a brutal brevity once attributed to Shakespeare. It shows a ruined gambler who savagely abuses his wife and children, and finally murders a selection of them. The play blames this on the devil but we are free to see it as an objective, even clinical, picture of psychopathic degradation. Not the least horrifying thing about it is the portrayal of the wife who goes on loving him, whatever. Women in the audience were overheard declaring her to be a) outrageously masochistic and b) quite believable. Certainly the actress, Mary Jo Randle, seemed to have no trouble with her, and the northern accent made her seem very immediate. Stephen Petcher as her tormentor was also recognizable at first blush, macho and sneering. But the play esque gradients. Amorphe offends ness. Paris 'Elektra': Behrens, Ozawa ional Herald Tribune DARIS — Richard Strauss, in one of his paradoxical witticisms about his own music, said that "Salome" and "Elektra" should be played "as if they were fairy music by Mendelssohn." That is exactly what Seiji Ozawa does in conducting the new production of Elektra" at the Paris Opera, and the result is marvelously revealing. not only in orchestral detail. but in the vocal subtlety that the cast is able to bring to its daunting task.

Any performance of "Elektra" can easily degenerate into a contest between the post-Wagnerian effusions of a gigantic orchestra and the ability of the cast to ride over the sound. Here the cast would have been equal to that - especially the women, who were Hildegard Behrens in the title role, Jeannine Altmeyer as Chrysothemis and Christa Ludwig as Klytemnestra. But with Ozawa at the controls, and the Opera's orchestra in unusually responsive form, such heroic exertions were rarely necessary. It would be an exaggeration to say that this was an "Elektra" of chamber-music proportions, but it was often close to that - one in which Hofmannsthal's text was delivered with nuance and, when the occasion demanded, with ample power as well, and in which Strauss' dense but carefully calculated score was made exceptionally transparent. This went hand in hand with a production - directed by Seth Schneidman (who is Behrens's husband), designed by Hubert Mon-loup, and cleverly lit by Jean Boyer - that edectically and effectively presents the succession of one-on-one conflicts in the house of Atreus against a background of their Freudian convolutions. There is no suggestion of Greek antiquity in Monloup's set. In the background is the dilapidated facade of a mansion, a kind of Victorian-Viennese baroque that might serve well enough for a pro-duction of Eugene O'Neill's trilogy on the same theme, while the front of the stage is occupied by a glistening black structure in which most the entrances and exits take place — the bottom of a dreamlike funnel housing the calamitous psychological encounters that form the essence of the drama.

Monloup's costumes are archetypes from different historical periods. Elektra's disheveled red hair suggests her derangement, but her strapless dress could do nicely for a cocktail party, while Chrysothe-mis's sedate robe suggests the sister's more conventional attitudes. Klytemnestra and Aegisth are outfitted in stylized versions of 19thcentury monarchical getup - she an elaborately gowned and jeweled Habsburg grand duchess, he an Offenbach clown prince — and Orest arrives on his fateful mission in a medieval suit of armor, his iron belmet helping to explain Elektra's initial lack of recognition.

The result was an "Elektra" in which the savage myth is not so much updated as it is filtered through the conventions and manners of more recent times, suggesting that the ties that bind this very special one man's family are always with us.

Behrens was singing the title role for the first time — which must leave her few, if any, worlds to conquer in the German dramatic soprano department. She conquered this one as she has the others - with unforced power, a gleaming, silvery timbre used with security, accuracy and a contained dramatic intensity. And she did a convincing final dance of crazed triumph. Altmeyer was equally un-stinting of voice, and the creamier texture of her soprano contrasted effectively with Behrens's metal.

Ludwig is a veteran Klytemnestra, yet she sang and acted the part as if she (or Scheidman, or both) had thought it out anew. This corrupt queen's decay is not yet physi cal, but within the body and mind of a still-beautiful woman, self-assured at first but gradually crumbling morally during the undermin-ing onslaught of her vengeful daughter. This Klytemnestra falls to pieces in full view: a master portrait by a great singing actress.

What chance do the men have in this demonic girls' club? Not much, mere tools of fate that they are, but John Bröcheler was a solid, idiomatic Orest, and the versatile Jean Dupouy a brilliantly neurasthenic Aegisth, in their brief duties.

Further performances in this series are scheduled for Feb. 6, 10, 13, 15 and 17. The production returns from April 14 to May 6, with Gwyneth Jones as Elektra, Cheryl Studer and Hélène Garetti alternating as Chrysothemis, Helga Dernesch as Klytemnestra, and Kent Nagano

Nonchalantly Downward

Presidential messages snow down on Washington in January. This year it is harder than usual to shovel through to the truth. The main message, on the State of the Union, treated immediate economic troubles almost nonchalantly. The union will be in a dangerous state if action is delayed, and yet the messages were neither constructive nor urgent.

The lange foreign deficit can make the dollar nose-dive. The deficit cannot shrink fast, but Washington has to convince the markets that its actions will reduce it progressively. Otherwise the U.S. government will have to choose between constant depreciation and a tightening of monetary policy fierce enough to expose jobs, instead of the dollar, to a free fail. Does the Republican Party want to go into the 1988 elections 19222 stances even mildly similar to 1932?

The dollar has fallen for nearly two years. Why hasn't the deficit shrunk? Some attack states like Hong Kong and Taiwan for not letting their currencies rise, but on average these have only kept stable against the dollar without offset-ting its decline against Europe and Japan.

Other arguments are more convincing. When imports are 60 percent above exports, the latter have to rise much faster than the former if the deficit is to shrink. Repeated trade deficits add to the interest bill; debt compounds itself. And when the dollar falls, the first thing that happens is that the deficit rises because imports cost more dollars than before. In theory this obverse effect eventually reverses as home output replaces foreign goods and U.S. exporters slowly crank up because they find themselves more competitive. But the longer the dollar falls, the longer the obverse tendency lasts. The problem is that the 1985 devaluation was not once-and-for-all. It continues, so the import bill keeps rising.

But the essential consideration is that devaluation does not work without accompanying action to temper spending -and thus imports -and impel producers to seek markets abroad.

Exactly the reverse is needed from the revaluing countries. None are observing this rule. West Germany and Japan are at fault - but the United States, too, must act, reining in domestic demand and reducing its savings gap. For that, budget control is urgent. But the markets have small trust in the Reagan plan (a modest deceleration of the defense buildup, no tax hike, slashed nonmilitary spending) because Congress won't buy it.

The budget impasse could still be resolved. New compromises on military and civilian outlays are possible, and to raise revenue a temporary income tax surcharge and a new energy tax would make sense. To be avoided like the plague is any attempt to raise revenue by higher import duties, which would weaken attempts to make American producers more efficient and start an international tariff war. The worst enemy of all, however, is the Reagan administration's apparent refusal to go beyond the budget policies that failed last year and have resulted in a continually falling dollar. Snatched on the Job

Iran and Lebanon have become swamps into which outsiders venture at their peril. This was well understood by Terry Waite, the Aughean envoy last seen in Beirut on Jan. 20. Indeed, he left instructions that no attempt be made to rescue him if he was taken captive. And every Western correspondent knows the risks of accepting even an official invitation to Iran, with its hostile regime of fending clerical rulers.

Witness the ordeal of Gerald Seib, Middle East correspondent of The Wall Street Journal, now detained for undisclosed reasons at an undisclosed place in Iran. That Mr. Seib did anything to justify this out-rageous treatment is inconceivable to colleagues who know him as a prudent, experienced reporter. He was among 57 Western cornalists invited for a guided tour of Iran and the front in the war with Iraq. Unless he is promptly released, it will be impossible for anyone to take Iran's word seriously about war claims or anything else.

The worst-case surmise is that Iran and fresh captives to extort yet more TOW missiles from President Reagan. If so, that is bad news for Mr. Seib and Mr. Waite, since no such deal is imaginable. If so, that is also bad news for the president, for it would tub his nose in the error of undue eagerness to free imprisoned Americans. There remains nevertheless the possibility of confusion and error, of pragmatic second thoughts about abducting an emissary or a journalist. Every hostage incident has its singularities and each needs to be judged in its context. With calm and reason, Mr. Seib's captors may come to recognize that they have no grievance with him and can release him in the knowledge that he is a professional journalist who has done no more than his job — indeed, done so at their government's invitation. Likewise, as Mr. Waite's presumed captors honor courage, they will honor his by promptly freeing him.

End the Polish Sanctions

The suppression of Solidarity, the inde-endent labor organization in Poland, ocpendent labor organization in Poland, occurred on Ronald Reagan's watch and imposed on his administration a special moral burden to do something about it. Military relief was out of the question, but other forms of relief were not. To this end the administration imposed aconomic sanctions to help democratic Poles. It has been tough going, since sanctions cut two ways: They put pressure on the government but meanwhile hart the people who are their intended beneficiaries. Nonetheless, the United States has made a decent effort to halance these considerations, and it can fairly claim to have seen some positive changes take place partly as a result. The most important changes center on relaxing somewhat the degree of gross police interference in the lives of the people. What a Communist government can give, it can also easily take away; on previous occasions, Wojciech Jaruzelski released prisoners and then locked them up again. So the United States has necessarily been wary even as he has been moving in the right direction in the past year or so. Washington has gradually been ending its econom sanctions, but it hesitated to commit itself to ending them entirely without better assurances that General Jaruzelski would not again reverse field. It was to explore such

He is the ranking American to visit Poland since martial law was imposed late in 1981.

The special place that Poland occupies in Eastern Europe was evident in his visit. He saw, naturally, General Jaruzelski. But he also saw Lech Walesa of Solidarity, who, although officially an unleader of an unorganization, has an undeniable shadow role all the same, and Cardinal Jozef Glemp, head of the Polish Catholic Church, whose mass following has long required the Communist regime to leave it room for its many works. For some time the latter two men have favored the ending of American sanctions as a sign of some political relaxation and as a contribution to the economic health of the country. It seems that the Whitehead talks moved the United States toward this position and, barring a reversal on the Polish government's part, sanctions should be phased out before too long.

The sanctions have had their critics. It was pointed out that martial law at its toughest left Poles better off - they could travel to Western Europe, for instance — than Soviets and other East Europeans. At the least, nonetheless, sanctions let America express solidarity with Solidarity. The ending of sanctions does the same. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

. The strong possibility must be faced that more of the hostages taken in Lebanon will be killed. There is no intention in Kuwait to release any of the 17 men imprisoned there on terrorist charges, which is the move for which Islamic Jihad has been bargaining. The Israelis do not plan to release 400 of their own prisoners for the four academics. three American and one Indian, abducted [on Jan. 24] at Beint University College by another Shite offshoot, Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine.

The frustrations in the Western camp are mounting, which is one precise purpose of hostage-taking, but we have got to live with them. No one can have many certainties in this situation, but talk of "surgical strikes" against targets deemed to be terrorist-orientated seems like so much bravado. What starts as surgery is liable to end in mutilation, with the deaths of many more people as innocent as the captives themselves.

On the merits so far, the only safe policy is one of Western disengagement until the storm abates. Innovative Asia: Not the U.S. Sweatshop It Once Was

WASHINGTON — captured much of the world trade in manufactured goods, Asia is now turning to the areas where American companies have remained dominant:

innovation, product development and the service industries. Until recently, much of Asia was regarded as a sweatshop at the service of U.S. industry. Scores of American. companies have given up manufacout the whole tiresome chore to folks on the other side of the Pacific.

Over the years, this strategy has worked well for many U.S. and Asian companies. But recently, success has spawned a revolution of rising expectations among Asian entrepreneurs.
Throughout Asia, companies are moving at times with startling speed, beyond the manufacturing process into the more creative tasks of product development and marketing that once were left to foreigners. Dependency is giving way to independence, and collaboration to competition.

The Japanese, of course, were in the forefront of this movement. Japanese companies today are among the world's leading innovators in everything from consumer products to fashion design and computer soft-ware. And with four of the world's five largest banks calling Tokyo their home, Japan is poised to replace the United States as the center of world finance early in the next century.

Recently, the same process has be-gun to spread through the newly in-dustrialized nations of Asia. From South Korea to Singapore, nations once thought of as mere manufactur-ing platforms are beginning to devel-op their own technology and service industries. Many of these enterprises are linanced by local banks, and most have the active cooperation of govin managing national economies.

Nowhere is this shift more dramatic than in Singapore. For most of its 21 years of independence, it derived much of its economic sustenance from investment by foreign manufacturers. Today, multinational comosnies account for 70 percent of Singapore's industrial capacity and exports. And local service firms live largely by catering to the needs of overseas corporations.

Until recently, Singaporeans saw little reason to question this. Their nology, our own marketing."

The well-worn strategy of using tax breaks and other incentives to attract overseas corporations no longer dominates government thinking in Singapore. Government initiatives focus increasingly on such incentives as lower corporate taxes, venture-capital funds, and low-interest loans, all targeted at entrepreneurs.

Mr. Foo is something of a hero in the move toward economic independence. When he took over Singatronics in 1980, the company was doing $2 million in sales a year, making electronic games and calculators.

Mr. Foo, a former Olivetti execu-tive, quickly drove Singatronics up-scale. He recruited top talent from the local operations of other multinationals, people who were able to win big contracts from large foreign companies. With the proceeds from those contracts reinvested in a mod-ernized manufacturing operation, he turned loose his engineers and man-of medical electronic instruments. The company's Healthcheck brand products (including digital thermometers, blood-pressure readers and pregnancy tests) now account for as much as one-quarter of its $33 million in annual sales.

Chi and Associates, a 30person engineering consulting firm, recently won several large contracts from U.S. and Japanese companies with projects in Indonesia. Tony Chi's task is to adapt his customers' plans to local labor and materials.

"Americans and Japanese don't know how to build in this kind of environment," said Mr. Chi, a 1970 graduate of Pennsylvania State University. "You might design a steel building in Los Angeles that, in Indonesia, is actually cheaper to build with concrete. We know better how to employ cheap labor and technical skills in this part of the world."

P ENANG, Malaysia — When five Japanese mining companies Sabah, Malaysia, all sides seemed happy. The Japanese obtained copper at low prices, the local partners got rich, the state government collected its taxes and Malaysia's gross do-

But metal pollution from the mine contaminated a wide swath of farmland and destroyed the livelihood of an entire community. The cost to the farmer of getting copper to Japan has never been calculated.

MADRID — Spanish conservatives pursue their irritating, Machiavellian plots behind closed doors to find a new chief; in in such a grip that they have little bargaining power. Their nonrenew-able resources are eaten up at low prices, while their economies become increasingly dependent on expensive imports from Japan. Japan is the leading source of imports for every Southeast Asian country but the Philippines, according to the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry.

It is also the leading source of delopment aid to the region. Thailand gets a hefty 68 percent of its aid from Japan; the Philippines, 56 percent; and Malaysia, 55 percent, according to the Japanese figures.

This heavy dependence on Japan for imports and aid is no coincidence. as Tsuchiya Takeo argues in AMPO: Japan-Asia Quarterty Review.

When Japanese capital began mov-ing into Southeastern Asia in the 1970s, the objectives were to exploit cheap labor and to secure markets. anese cars, televisions, textile and machinery, locally assembled soon controlled these markets.

From this Third World springboard, Japanese goods could pene-trate U.S. and European markets where quotas blocked their direct import from Japan. But by the end of the decade, Japanese investment, to the tune of several billion dollars a year, was pouring into the resource-extracting industries. In Indonesia, where Japanese investment topped $7 billion in 1984, much of it went into oil, LNG, copper, iron and steel. Although most of the plants in-Attacuga most of the plants in-volved were joint ventures, the Japa-nese partner typically retained man-agement control, supplied machinery and equipment and often exported 100 percent of the output to Japan. Such investment also acted to move polluting industries outside Ja-pan, Professor Ui Jun of Tokyo University, president of the Asian Environmental Society, told a Third World conference in Penang in 1984. He noted that the Ulsan Chemica company, which makes chromium, moved to South Korea after Japanese protesters said it was polluting soils in a Tokyo suburb. And Kawasaki Steel Corp. moved an ore sintering plant to the Philippines after com-plaints about air pollution. As investment by Japanese companies in resource-extracting operations surged, government aid to these industries grew. This liance has been extremely useful to Japanese investors. It has kept trade union activity to a minimum in af-fected sectors and allowed local protests over pollution to be contained. But some communities have re-fused to be cowed. In the small town of Papan in Malaysia, residents and environmentalists protested the sit-ing nearby of a nuclear waste dump. The waste is produced by Asian Rate Earth, a joint venture between a local company and Mitsubishi Chemical Industries of Japan.

The governments and the company initially denied there was any danger and threatened the "agitators" with police action. But protests continued until the dump was moved to a re-mote area and residents won a temporary court injunction to close the factory. The company has appealed.

It is, therefore, with regret that we find him entertaining the im-practicable suggestions of "faddists" and putting forth their notions in a demagogic manner. Advocacy of peace congresses, which only set men to fighting, and his proposal that an international conference shall be held in Washington to consider "the high cost of living," are instances of this. His recommendation that the Government shall purchase the Alaska Central Railroad is on the same line.

Hart Today: Less Dazzle, Solid Ideas.

By David S. Broder

W ASHINGTON — In the midst of last week's East Coast blizzard, Gary Hart went shopping for a campus that was clear enough to provide him a lecture hall. He wound up at Duke University. What he said these about the structure challenge there about the education challenge facing the United States was another indication that the early front-runner for the Democrats' 1988 presidential nomination is ready to meet the test in the issues area.

As with his speeches last year on the economy, defense and foreign policy, the former Colorado senator thid not seek to dazzle with "new ideas."

That was his game in 1984 and it backfired when Walter Mondale called his bluff in an Atlanta debate.

Rether what Mr. Hart has dove, in Rather, what Mr. Hart has done, in one policy field after another, is to demonstrate that he is familiar with past proposals, has filtered them through his own value system and sense of political realities, and has put them back together in a program that has structure and logic.

That talent is a good part of presidential leadership. The other part is salesmanship, the ability to enlist public support for the policy. That has not been Mr. Hart's strength, but the coming campaign will help mea, sure his current capacity in that field.

For now, Mr. Hart is producing an agenda that appears to be based on a realistic assessment of national needs and resources, rather than a calculation of what must be said to satisfy the demands of each of the Democratic Party's most vocal constituency and interest groups. In his education speech, Mr. Hart talked about the need for a federal role and proposed ways to raise the $12 billion in revenues he estimates the first three years would cost.... He stressed the need for early edu-cation for poor children and the importance of broad access to college. He did not discuss bilingual educa-tion — a powerful symbolic issue to politically active Hispanics. He is sending the signal that his approach will be different from the court-the-constituencies strategy that undermined Mr. Mondale in 1984.

Mr. Hart's blueprint draws heavily on the work of the Carnegie Forum and the National Governors Association. It is more bipartisan in charac-ter than his rhetorical shots at the Reagan administration's record on education would suggest. But for that reason, it provides a realistic blueprint of what the next administration could do - in cooperation with the states, local communities and the private sector --- to improve the education system at every level. Like his other recent speeches, this one shows the effort Mr. Hart and his advisers have made to reduce a complex subject to its essentials. It is written in commendably clear, if

Its opens this way: "The key to unlock the 21st century for America is education. . . Individual and institutional interests must be subogitinate to this overriding national interest: creating a fully literate America, imbued with democratic values, where each individual is empowered to master the challenges of change."

Mr. Hart suggests comprehensive goals ranging from improved preschool programs to adult literacy and retraining efforts. He describes the national policies that will meet them, and puts forth a set of "specific chal-lenges" — the trade-offs that will be required and the responsibilities indiiduals will have to accept.

Here is where Mr. Hart is at his best. He provides a tough antidote to the mindless overindulgence and excesses of the last six years of "you can have it all" thinking.

Parents, he says, can have beger schools for their children, but offly if they accept the responsibility, for making their homes "every bit, as dedicated to successful learning," by such steps as keeping the television off until homework is finished." Students can be helped to finance . * all the education they want, but must in turn be ready to aid their communities through participation in a national service program.

Business can get better-trained workers, but must accept a share of the borden of retraining displaced workers and providing early warnings of impending layoffs.

Teachers can have higher pay, more respect and a larger woce-in running their schools, but only if litey accept tough evaluations of their peraccept tough evaluations of their per-formance and changes in archaic par terns of education.

Mr. Hart has produced a good meprint. What he cannot now produce is evidence that he is enough of a leader to make it happen. But that is what campaigns are designed to test. The Washington Post.

Holding the Truth Land Holding the Land Holdin Holding the Truth Hostage

WASHINGTON - Larry Speakes, alive then an instrument of policy. departing White House spokes-man, offhandedly revealed an illuminat-ing fact in a farewell interview. He recalled that at the time of the Grenada invasion he unwittingly misled the press when asked about it. He had been misinformed, and his credibility undermined when the deception was exposed, by a National Security Council staff member named "Poindexter, of all people."

I remember calling the White House, soon after the Grenada invasion was announced, to find out who was responsible for the decision to exclude the press from the combat operation. Throughout America's wars, the tradition was to bring along at least a few correspondents to report the action impartially, at no risk to military security.

Robert McFarlane, then national security adviser, took my call and wondered, "Is that really your central con-cern in all this?" Here was an example of prompt and effective use of force to stop Communist takeover and prevent the taking of U.S. hostages; here was an action that hawkish pundits could be expected to appland; what was this fuse about a side issue of media coverage?

The fuss was about telling the truth to the people. The United States govern-ment may on rare occasion fall silent for a time, but it must not deliberately lie; only the presence of reporters pledged to temporary secrecy can help justify a news blackout. By breaching that democratic precedent, and by issuing a lie, the Resean administration engaged in selfcorruption far more important than one victory in the Caribbean.

I think Bud McFarlane may realize that now. But Vice Admiral John Poindexter, promoted to the national security adviser's post after that lie, probably oes not. That is because the truth, for him, seems to be less a moral imper-

Precisely Not Regicide

MANY foreigners see Americans' reaction to the Iran-contra affair as a self-damaging wound, much as they viewed the uproar over Watergate. They shake their heads and wonder about a penchant for resicide. But Americans cannot commit regicide, having got rid of their king long ago and introduced a constitutional system to prevent the arbitrary abuse of power by government officials. It is important to understand that the American insistence that presidents and subordinates be held strictly accountable to the sovereign people un-der their laws is absolutely essential to America's identity as a nation.

-L.H. Fuchs in The New York Times.

The same man who misled Larry Speakes about Grenada urged the president to apply "disinformation" to the pressure on Libya. He saw nothing wrong in destroying the reputation for truthfulness of U.S. officials by peddling stories to the press that might make an enemy dictator nervous.

When his stupid and venal memorandum was unearthed and exposed in The Washington Post, Admiral Poindexter came before a group of pundits and pumped out some bomiog about having to check his files, never admitting its authorship. The truth was not some thing he was prepared to own up to. We know now that as he was stonewalling about disinformation, this flag officer had for months been urging the officer had for monus president to trade arms for hostages in president to trade arms for hostages in scoret while saying just the opposite in public. No wonder, when called upon to do his duty and report the whole truth, he becomes the first admiral to take refuge in the Fifth Amendment.

Americans have the right to assume that his truthful testimony would tend to incriminate him, perhaps to cause his criminal indictment, conviction and in-carceration. With Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North and Richard Secord, Mr. Poindexter stands allent in the midst of a scandal more akin to Tespot Dome than to Watergate, a scandal not merely of abuse of presidential softheartedness but one in which investigators tell me that $40 million is unaccounted for.

Not all high officials in this matter have brought shame on the U.S. Naval Academy, which graduated John Poindexter first in his class apparently without inculcating in him the democratic value of truthfulness in office and accountability to superior officers. Mr. McParlane, Donald Regan and George Shultz, all former marine officers who did not receive their higher education at public expense, have taken the oath and taken their chances by testifying. But Admiral Poindexter persists in his pattern of refusing to tell the truth. His excuses have ranged from national security to self-incrimination, but his habit was established and rewarded years ago.

This is not a man to be given immunity from prosecution. Americans are ed the truth; they should not have to pay ransom for it. If justice requires that the Poindexter testimony be delayed, and if the admiral chooses to hold the president hostage, so be it. If anybody in this gets convicted, that person would probably have a lot to say to show con-trition before sentencing.

As for the deception-crippled presi-dent, the next time he decides to sign a Bible, let him consider what John 8:32 says: "And ye shall know the truth, and truth shall make you free." The New York Times.

Danger, Cotton-Swabbing Giants at Work

N EW YORK — Controversy over the vast "restoration" of Michelangelo's frescoes in the Sistine Chapel at the Vatican is growing. This controver-sy, in turn, is part of a larger debate over what is known as "art conservation."

Most masterpieces hang in museums, where resident technicians constantly "intervene" to "stabilize" admittedly aging and physically imperfect paintings. "Conservators," such as the Varican's Gianluigi Colalucci, the Metropolitan Museum of Art's John Brealey and the Getty Museum's Andrea Rothe, carry incredible clous. Artists and connoisscurs alike are seen as retarded romanties who must bow to "scientific objectivity" as personified by establishment giants of the cotton swab.

Art conservation is thus rapidly becoming a million-dollar industry. In museum basement labs equipped with hot tables, scalpel racks, detergent tubs and spray booths, swarms of highly paid specialists labor to make the world's art heritage like new — or like zero. By Alexander Eliot

"If it ain't broke, don't fix it," pleads Roger Kennedy, director of the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History. Yet news coverage tends to-ward hyperbole. Heroic efforts are reported. "Science triumphant snatches art from the sooty fingers of grimly hurrying time." Well, yes and no. Socalled art restoration is at least as tricky as brain surgery. Most pictures expire under scalpel and sponge.

Assiduous cleaning has converted Rembrandt's famed "Night Watch" into a day watch. Titian's "Bacchus and Ariadne" at London's National Gallery is a pressed flower now. The Frick Museum's "Saint Francis in Ecstasy" by Giovanni Bellini is a bluish corpse of its former self. After Francis Henry Taylor retired from directing the Metropolitan Museum, he confessed to me that over-

Rembrandt holdings. Relatively modern masters suffer, too. Smiling summer scenes by Renoir and Monet are routinely reduced to flat, toothpaste-bright grimaces. Van Gogh's visual outeries are made to resemble color slides.

Should science be blamed for these common miscarriages? No, science is only the cutting edge of art conserva-tion. The blade itself is fashion, forged by our modern taste for pictures that can be "read" at a glance. People no longer enjoy making an effort to see what they are looking at. If past masters of painting were so thoughtless as to compose in depth, with veiling hues and shades compacted to create a vibrantly mysterious palimpsest, let these be flattened, brightened, rendered plain as day. Let us impoverish painting in short, not so much to keep it safe

This is going on now at the Vatican The restoration of the Sistine ceiling irreversibly expunges the top layers of the greatest painting ever ma Vatican's conservators and their Ameri-can colleagues concede this point. Can they date the layers that they are taking of? No, they say, but that is irrelevant because only the bottom layer of watercolor pigments in plaster is by Michel-angelo. Therefore, the fresco's top layers are only grime plus previous retouchings and restorations by hands unknown. So much for theory; what does eyesight say? Any disinterested observer who carefully examines the Vatican's own "before and after" shots of the criling will notice two things. First, the cleaned portions are flat, schematic and shrill in hue. Second, Michelangelo's not-yet-cleaned images are fully modeled as to form and profoundly harmo-nized as to color. Thus one can sense both the underlying bone structure and the emotional state of each and every uncleased figure there.

Up to now we have credited this to Michelangelo's genius. But the conser-vators say no. For centuries, we have been falsely inspired by a disposable coat of crud. The actual hot-flash Michelangelo lay hidden underneath for Mr. Colalucci's cohorts to discover. Now, thanks to modern science, we can see how things stood when Michelangestepped down. Or can we?

Nearly half of the Sistine ceiling has already been reduced to postcard quality. Public outery could save the second half for future generations to enjoy.

Shock Therapy for Whom?

Regarding the opinion column "Shock herapy: America Needs the IMF Treut-(Jan. 27):

As an American in Europe, I am hard pressed to explain to my European friends just whom it is that Alan Stoga's "emergency program" for the U.S. economy would shock. Two of its three elements would require the country's trading partners to pay for what he correctly states as America's penchant for over-consuming and under-saving.

West Germany and Japan, two countries that have kept their economic houses in order (albeit by sometimes questionable methods) are urged "to help finance U.S. deficits" while America imposes "a temporary tariff on all imports" and pledges "to forgo new pro-tectionist measures" (as if a "temporary tariff" were not protectionist.) All this would aim at restoring American "com-petitiveness" and rebuilding the nation's standard of living - an incredible statement for most Europeans. Instead of taxing only the consu tion of imported goods through a tariff, the United States ought to tax all consumption through a value-added tax. This could be temporary, though in ar-eas such as gasoline consumption it could be used to encourage beneficial long-term readjustments. For it is not the excessive consumption of imported goods that underlies the U.S. deficit, it is, quite simply, excessive consumption. In any case, hoping that U.S. exports will boost America's standard of living is a chimera. Less than half of U.S. gross national product is in industrial production, and the level will continue to drop. Aside from the high technology sector, U.S. competitiveness will be measured increasingly in terms of services. The below the sums donated by Mrs. Whitt-SCOTT SUNQUIST. St. Denis, France. What Buckley Overlooked

Regarding "The Ambassador's Enter ment Fund" (Jan. 24): Does William F. Buckley really not understand why private contributions to individual embassies for entertainment individual embassies for entertainment purposes are both improper and inequi-table, or has he conveniently set judg-ment aside lest it complicate his intemperate attack on the Foreign Service and the Washington bureaucracy? For the sake of clarity, and because we do not know otherwise, let us assume that Faith Ryan Whittlesey, the U.S. ambassador to Switzerland, used the money only for those purposes for which the fund was intended, and that Attorney General Edwin Meese established that fact without reference to press reports that he was the guest of honor at one of her official dinners. Representation funds are allocated to U.S. embassies abroad in line with the same criteria that dictate the allocation of other resources, such as staffing levels or travel allowances. While the local cost of living plays a role, the principal standard is the relative importance to the United States of the country involved. Representation money is just another tool given an ambassador to allow him or her to implement U.S. foreign policy, most importantly by promoting the views of the current president. Switzerland is surely of some impor-tance to the United States. But many embassies more central to U.S. foreign policy than the embassy in Bern have al representational allowances well lesey's friends and supporters. By per-mitting carmarked contributions of that kind, we give individual donors a special voice in determining U.S. priorities among countries, a foreign policy matter that is the prerogative of the president. Even if such contributions were put in a pool for general distribution to U.S. embassies, privileged individuals would be in a position of special influence as to how the government attends to its business. This is not wholly unlike allowing individuals to designate the uses to which their taxes may be put. We elect representatives for that purpose and vote them out if we don't like the result. ALAN D. 5 SIMPLE RULES AND YOU TOO COULD MAKE $464,000,000.

To look at the burgeoning profits of Hanson Trust, one might imagine we had glimpsed the business equivalent of the Philosopher's Stone.

In fact, our secret is far more prosaic. We have simply established a few rules which guide every decision we make.

As you read them, they may seem like nothing more than good old-fashioned common sense. We wouldn't disagree.

1. ALWAYS PUT THE INTERESTS OF SHAREHOLDERS FIRST.

Hanson Trust doesn't belong to the management. It belongs to some 165,000 shareholders. It is therefore our duty always to put their interests first.

2. INVEST IN BASIC INDUSTRIES.

We invest in industries providing basic goods and essential services to proven markets. Thus, our shareholders are spared the hazards of changing fashions and leap-frogging technology.

3. ALWAYS CONSIDER THE DOWNSIDE RISK.

When considering an acquisition, our first question is "How much could we lose if it all goes wrong?" And if the answer makes us nervous, then we don't proceed.

(Allen

4. AGREE BUDGETS WITH OPERATING COMPANIES.

BUT NEVER INTERFERE DAY-TO-DAY.

If an operating company wants to develop a new product, or, indeed, paint it sky blue pink, that's fine by us. They simply tell us the cost, the benefits and the attendant risk.

Provided we agree their budget, it will then be up to them to come up with the goods as promised.

5. REWARD EXCELLENCE.

We all need a little motivation in this life.

Thus our share option scheme is reserved not for a chosen few, but spread widely amongst managers throughout our operating companies.

Furthermore, when any one of them turns in an exceptional performance they receive an equally exceptional bonus.

Now you know the secret of our success. But if you wish to emulate it, you'll have some catching up to do.

For 23 consecutive years we have turned in record profits, and last year's reached £464,000,000.

So those rules of ours are indeed golden ones.

British Fund Managers Test A New Strategy: 'Ethics'

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ONDON — Corporate managers in Britain are witnessing the birth of a new breed, the "moral" shareholder who will invest only in what this investor considers "ethical" stocks. On the list of banned investments are tobacco, alcohol, gambling, nuclear and arms companies. Also conspicuously absent from most of the "ethical" investment funds are stocks of companies doing business in South Africa.

Investments influenced by social consciousness have become increasingly common in the United States since 1977, mostly as investors have divested holdings in companies with South African links. Estimates of "ethical" investments in the United States range from $200 billion, a fig-ure given by the Calvert Social Investment Fund in Washington, D.C., to $300 billion, an estimate by the Social Investment Forum in Boston.

In Britain, the funds are much newer and the sums much smaller, though no over-all figures are available. The largest "ethical" fund, the Stewardship Trust, is two years old and manages about £37 million ($56 million). Professional Fidelity Growth Trust, started in July 1985 by the British Medical Association for its members and managed by Fidelity Investors Services Ltd., now comprises about £7 million. Two other funds were founded last year.

British shareholders, like many Americans before them, wonder whether ethical investments can be as profitable as traditional investments. They also wonder how an investment is defined as "moral" or not, and how it is possible to keep track of activities of multinational companies around the world

"A lot of people are interested in ethical investments," said Peter Silvester, general manager of investments at Friends Provident, a British life insurance group that manages £6 billion, including the Stewardship Trust. "They just have to be convinced they wouldn't lose all their money doing it." Last month, the Stewardship Trust was ranked 35th out of 138 general trusts by Money Management, a service that ranks investment funds, with a 48.1 percent return over two years, compared with an average of

According to a study by Ann Woodall at the City of London Polytechnic, the return on "ethical" funds last year was 7 pence less than in traditional investments for each £1,000 invested.

LTHOUGH American ethical funds say they have higherthan-average returns over the last five years, the manager of one is cautious about their performance.

"We don't make claims this type of fund will ensure a better performance," said Jeff Friedman, who manages three funds for Dreyfus Corp., one of the oldest New York investment management firms and one of the biggest, with holdings of $40 billion. His Third Century Fund, a socially conscious fund whose assets have grown eightfold, to $160 million, since 1972, underperformed all other investment indexes last year, with a 6-percent rate of return. "What we have shown over the last 14 years." he said, "is that it doesn't hurt performance over the long run."

But most British shareholders still are not convinced, fund managers there said. "The tobacco-free fund is a very small fund for us," said Hilary Smith, who heads investor communications for Fidelity Investor Services, an investment company in London that manages $7.5 billion worldwide. "We aren't planning any other ethical trusts because basically we've seen very little demand for it from the

Another problem is determining whether a stock is "ethical" or not. Criteria differ among the funds. Pesch Makes Bid For Firm

$1.7 Billion for American Medical

CHICAGO - American Medical International Inc. said Tuesday that it had received an offer from Alpha Health Systems Corp., a subsidiary of Pesch & Co., to acquire the company for $20 a share, or $1.74 billion.

American Medical has outstanding about 86.9 million shares. On the New York Stock Exchange, American Medical closed Tuesday at $19.25, up $1.375 from its Monday close of $17.875.

Pesch is a privately held interna-tional company, based in Chicago, with interests in health care, information systems and real-estate de-

Its offer is contingent on financing and will remain open for con-sideration by the American Medical board until Feb. 17.

American Medical, based in Beverly Hills, California, operates 159 health-care facilities in the United States and abroad.

For the first quarter of the fiscal year, ended Nov. 30, American Medical reported earnings of $28.6 million, or 33 cents a share, on revenues of $931.8 million.

Analysts in New York said that American Medical's board was expected to reject the takeover offer.

"I would expect it to be viewed as antagonistic," said Byron Ni-mocks of E.F. Hutton Group. "Certainly the premium they of-fered over yesterday's closing price is not very exciting."

Analysts speculated that Pesch & Co., headed by Dr. Leroy Pesch, had simply put forth a first bid and might be willing to top it later.

Dr. Pesch headed Health Resources, which was bought by Republic Health Corp. in 1984. Republic, a hospital chain besed in Texas, went private in a leveraged buyout led by Dr. Pesch last year.

The analysts disagreed on the potential value of American Medical, which has been hurt in recent years by overcapacity in the hospital industry.

American Medical officials would not comment on the offer.

For R.H. Macy, the Price Was Right

Classic Leveraged Buyout Quickly Called a Success

By Isadore Barmash New York Times Service

NEW YORK — In early 1985, Edward S. Fin-kelstein, chairman of R.H. Macy & Co., the fourth-largest U.S. department store chain, found himself increasingly preoccupied with two problems. Some of his most talented executives were restless; a few were leaving for better-paying jobs with more authority at other retailers. And Macy stock was moving up in a way that suggested the possibility that someone was planning to launch a hostile

After pondering several possibilities, Mr. Fin-kelstein decided that a leveraged buyout would be the best way to address the problems. Following some backing and forthing on the price, shareholders overwhelmingly approved the $3.6 billion arrangement last July.

Seven months later, Mr. Finkelstein is ready to declare the new Macy a success.

Financial results for the the first quarter after the buyout, ending Nov. 1, were well above expec-tations: Sales increased 16.4 percent, to $1.23 billion (thanks in part to the opening of two stores), and instead of the $42 million loss foreseen at the time of the buyout, Macy lost only $8.6 million.

More important, the buyout seems to have work important, the buyout seems to have prompted a healthy change in corporate culture. "There's no question in my mind that it is working well because we have unleashed an entrepreneurial spirit here," said Mr. Finkelstein, 61.

Despite that rosy assessment, it is far too early to judge the success of the Macy leveraged buyout, group of managers, supported by outside inves-tors, borrows a great deal of money to buy the company. The loans are secured with the assets and future earnings of the company being bought. Ultimately, the managers hope to take the company public again at a far higher price.

The financial community expects Macy to go public again as soon as it has reduced enough of its debt to start showing regular profits. According to forecasts made at the time of the buyout, that would be in the early 1990s.

Proponents of leveraged buyouts argue that they are healthy because they increase management's financial stake in the company's success or failure. But critics contend that is a breach of fiduciary responsibility for the company's management to, in effect, mortgage the company's assets so that they can buy the company.

And, in some cases, managers have taken a company private, done some fast financial shuffling and taken the company public again, netting tremendous gains without really strengthening the Company.

The Macy transaction illustrates some of the advantages and disadvantages of the leveraged buyout approach. Many employees have respond-ed to the buyout with increased enthusiasm and a spirit of cooperation. But some are already showing signs of restlessness.

Investors must wait five to seven years for the buyout to begin paying off, and there is no guarantee that Macy will perform well enough to generate See MACY, Page 11

Aramco to Buy Saudi Crude at Official Price

Compiled by the Stuff From Duputcher NEW YORK — Arabian-American Oil Co. said Tuesday it had been authorized by its owners, Chevron Corp., Exxon Corp., Mobil Corp. and Texaco Inc., to enter a multiyear agree-ment to buy crude oil from Sau-di Arabia at the official OPEC Oil companies had previously been said to be resisting any long-term commitment to pur-chase Saudi Arabia's crude at a fixed price, given the uncertainty over prices.

Saudi Arabia's official price for its Arab light crude was set at $17.52 for Feb. 1 under an output-reduction agreement by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in December. Oil prices have risen by $3 a barrel since then. Dubai light, a key OPEC crude, bucked a downtrend in crudes on Tuesday to jump 85 cents to $17.95 a barrel. Analysts attributed this to the Áramco report. (Reuters, UPI) that "we will get an acceleration in the economy rather than the shump we once expected."

Mr. Metz said the more optimistic reading of the economy's prospects comes at a time when there are still "an enormous number of people" who have not yet bought stocks. These people "figure that the Dow is going to 4,000 without them, and so they think they better hurry up and buy stocks," Mr. Metz said.

Mr. Metz said another positive influence on the equity market is that foreign investors are oking at American stocks as attractive buys

The negative factor in the stock picture, Mr.

Metz said, is that "the whole case for higher prices rests on a very decided upward momenm for the earnings of American corporations, and that has yet to materialize."

Siemens World Group Net Edges Up

By Ferdinand Protzman

MUNICH - Siemens AG, West Germany's largest electronics group, said Tuesday that world group net profit was 298 million Doutsche marks in the first three months of fiscal 1987, slightly up from 296 million DM a year earlier. It said lower domestic sales were offset by a slight increase in sales board chairman, said world group sales were unchanged at 10.8 billion DM ($5.97 billion) in the period ended Dec. 31, 1986, from a year earlier. Domestic sales slipped to 5.2 billion DM from 5.3 billion. while foreign sales edged up to 5.6 billion DM from 5.5 billion.

Despite the lackluster performance, Mr. Kaske said he was confident that results would improve during the rest of the fiscal year.

He cited a 6-percent rise in or-ders to 13.5 billion DM from 12.7 billion in the first three months of Domestic orders rose 9 percent to 6.3 billion DM in the first three months from 5.7 billion DM a year earlier, while foreign orders gained 3 percent to 7.2 billion DM from 7 billion.

However, Mr. Kaske said his optimism was tempered by several As of Sept. 30, Siemens had lifactors, beginning with the decline quidity of 21.9 billion DM, up from of the dollar against the mark,

"If exchange-rate relationships do not worsen, I think we have matters well in hand," Mr. Kaske said. "That means if nothing dramatic happens, we should have a good year."

He also pointed out that Siemens is in transition from traditional electronics to high technology and Karlheinz Kaske, managing microelectronics, a change that requires enormous investment in capital goods and personnel.

> Under Mr. Kaske, Siemens has poured money into research and development, particularly in microelectronics, which now accounts for more than 50 percent of the company's sales.

In fiscal 1986, Siemens invested 6.1 billion DM in capital goods, up from 4.1 billion a year earlier, and another 5.4 billion in research and development, up from 4.7 billion.

The outlays have yet to bear full fruit, Mr. Kaske said, but projects like the joint development of com-puter memory microchips of 1 megabit, or I million bits of information, and of 4 megabit chips with Philips NV and Toshiba Corp. should begin contributing to results by 1988 or 1989.

The liquidity has made Siemens a topic of stock market rumors, particularly in the United States. In September and October, there was talk that Siemens was interested in buying Eastman Kodak Co.

While Siemens has expressed an interest in expanding its U.S. operations, it has yet to make a major

In fiscal 1986, Siemens spent 177 million DM to buy the electrical relay producer Potter & Brumfield of Princeton, Indiana, and 56 million DM for Pelton & Crane, a leading producer of dental equip-ment in Charlotte, North Carolina.

Stock market analysts said that a bigger purchase was likely to come in the next two years. "Part of the problem for Siemens in the U.S. is that everyone knows they are looking and have all that cash," said John Abbink, who monitors the company for Merrill Lynch Inc. in New York. "So it is possible that they are seeing a lot of inflated price tags. And while the dollar is decline and write the dollar is declining, there is no real hurry to buy. U.S.

Dealer Starts Prior Market In BA Shares

LONDON - A when-issued market in British Airways shares has been started by Cleveland Securities PLC despite its promise not to trade the stock before its issue.

Cleveland said that the minimum trade was 25,000 shares and that it was quoting a buy and seil price of 80 pence ($1.20) and 85 pence for the 65 pence partly paid shares. This suggests that BA shares will show a good premium when official dealings begin Feb. 11.

Last month Cleveland said it would no longer make a whenissued market in stocks of denationalized companies because of criticism before the British Gas PLC flotation last year. Low British Gas premiums on the when-issued market might have discouraged share-buying, some observers argued.

Stanley Beller, a Cleveland director, said it had changed its mind on a BA market because "We were being heavily pressed by institutional clients.

Diamond Shamrock Posted $42 Million Loss in Period

DALLAS — Diamond Shamrock Corp. said Tuesday that its fourth-quarter 1986 results had fallen to a loss of $42.2 million from a profit of $47.8 million a year before.

The company laid the reversal to lower refining and retail margins and depressed oil and gas prices.

The lower earnings report came a day after the company announced a comprehensive restructuring plan in a bid to fight off an unfriendly takeover attempt by T. Boone Pickena. The plan includes its own tender offer for 20 million common shares, the spinoff of a new public company and executive changes.

Diamond Shamrock said the lower margins cut income from refining and marketing, a key business that the company said Monday it would seek to sell as part of the restructuring.

Fourth-quarter sales declined to $589.9 million from $871.6 million a year earlier. For the year, operating net loss was put at $195.6 million, compared with a loss of $506.1 million the previous year.

The company noted that worldwide crude production jumped 38 percent in the fourth quarter to 90,829 barrels a day over a year ago, but that the average price declined 50 percent in the same period.

Natural gas production soared to its highest level of the year, more than 274 million cubic feet a day, but prices fell 29 percent, Diamond Shamurock said.

In another oil industry earnings report, Pennzoil posted fourth-quarter net profit of $46.5 million, an improvement over a loss of $41.1 million in the year-earlier quarter. Revenue in the fourth quarter was $496.9 million, compared with $534.7 million in the previous Pennzoil put not profit for 1986 at $45.4 million, compared with a profit of $113.2 million the previous year.

LONDON — Nine metal-broking creditors of the 22-member International Tin Council have served a writ on Britain, an importing member of the council, a spokesman for the creditors said Tuesday.

The tine, who belong to a group of ITC creditors known as Tinco Realizations, are claiming contractual losses and damages of around £124 million ($189.47 million), he said. The writ is also to be served against the council and the European Community. The council's price-support operations in the world tin market collapsed in October 1985.

How to Hold get more out of the Trib

A brief guide to the International Herald Tribune. the global newspaper, for time-pressured readers.

A perceptive reader once called the IHT "an index on the world" – a phrase that was meant to describe the paper as a whole - but is probably more appropriate to our front page.

Because our audience is so far-flung we don't look at the news through any national or political filter. We strive for a truly international perspective - a global context for our global

We draw on what is probably the world's most prestigious news-gathering network. In addition to our own reporters in key news centers, we have direct access to the reports of all New York Times and Washington Post bureaus around the world. Plus reports from the Los Angeles Times and the major news services: Associated Press, United Press International, Reuters and Agence France Presse.

Nearly 3 million words pour into our newsroom computers every day. A team of 40 professional editors selects, processes and condenses those words down to 3% of the original volume. What the editorial team chooses for page one is the most important news from around the world.

Who, What, Where, When, Why, How?

We try to be "sconnable."Lookatthe first sentence of a Trib news story and you'll probably find the answer to most or all of those six vital questions. Stories are written "pyramid-style," with the most important facts up front, and others added in order of descending importance - to make sure you get the most information in the shortest reading time.

What other tenets of good journalism do we subscribe to?

- Fact is strictly separated from opinion. We keep reporting as objective as possible, with judgments attributed to their sources. Opinions are reserved for the editorial pages.

- Accuracy and fairness are paramount. Our editors spend a lot of time painstakingly checking facts and insuring that different viewpoints are represented, so you can be sure that what you read in the Trib is as fair and accurate as

American and European Topics: REGULAR NEWSFEATURES

For those who want to keep up with trends in the U.S., "American Topics" appears each Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, usually on page 3. "European Topics" a similar selection of short, topical items on Europe, appears every Friday.

The Editorial Pages:

the International Herald Tribune. But crticles by them and by dozens of other world opinion leaders - have appeared recently on the THE WORLD LOOKS AT THE WORLD Trib's editorial pages

Carefully separated from the news pages, the seditorial pages present a wide range of analysis cord opinion from many points of view and from every corner of the world.

Coffee Organization Agrees to Meet on Quotas Feb. 23

Agence France-Presse

LONDON - The 50 producing and 25 consuming member-countries of the International Coffee Organization will meet in London this month in an attempt to negotiate the return of export quotas and stabilize the world market. The decision to call a full council session was made Tuesday by the organization's 16-member executive board.

It acted nearly a year after export quotas were suspended as a result of soaring prices after drought depleted the crop in Brazil, the world's biggest producer and exporter.

[Producers, which include Latin American,

African and Asian growers, and consumers, including the European Community nations and the United States, decided to hold the full council meeting on Feb. 23, Reuters reported from London.]

Some consumer delegates felt it would be impossible to reintroduce the export quota system by March 1, as producers would like.

On Monday, producers presented consumers with a proposal to reimpose export quotas, based on 58 million bags in the 12 months starting March 1. Each bag equals 60 kilograms (132 pounds).

The 58 million bags would be distributed initially according to individual percentage shares held by producers before quotas were Under that system, Brazil held a 30-percent share, which it fiercely defends despite the drought damage to its 1986 crop.

But the producer proposal contained an adjustment through the redistribution to other producers of 1.22 million bags of the global quota following shortfall declarations by Brazil (one million bags), the Organization of African and Malagasy Coffee Producers (200,000 bags) and Angola (20,000 bags).

Jamaica, Nicaragua, Ethiopia and El Salvador indicated that they did not wish to participate in the redistribution of the shortfall.

Consumer delegates said they hoped to meet before the council session to formulate a counterproposal. They warned that, "If producers stick to their current proposal, we will reject it," because it is based on an unchanged distribution of quotas by percentage.

Consumers have repeatedly opposed the percentage shares in force until last February, arguing that they do not reflect the pattern of Producers had hoped to placate consumers by redistributing the 1.32-million bag shortfall according to the true availability of coffee" in producing countries and not according to traditional percentage shares in the global quota.

In an additional departure from the usual application of the agreement, the smaller producing members — those who export fewer than 400,000 bags a year — had also been included in the shortfall redistribution.

AMERICAN HIGH:

DOSTWAR America was a rich hunting I ground for social critics. Everywhere they turned, there was something to shoot down. They took particular aim at conformity, peppering such weak sisters as the Organization Man and the Other-Directed Type. They told Americans that their cars were too big, their roads too disruptive, their homes an offense against good taste and their suburbs dull, dull, dull. President Truman was assailed by the right for being soft on communism and by the left for being unkind to the Soviet Union. Educated people made fun of President Eisenhower's locations. And, of course, there was Senator Joseph R. McCarthy.

Much of the criticism was well taken and some of it even bears rereading, but historical revisionism has been seeping in here as elsewhere. In the aftermath of Victnam and Watergate, the late 1940s and the 1950s have assumed a kindly glow. In "American High," William O'Neill calls the period from 1945 to 1960 "our time of greatest confidence."
Among its incidental attractions, homicide and divorce rates dropped and the illegitimacy rate

Although it touches many bases, from religion to rock 'n' roll (though not sports), "American High" is highly political. As demonstrated in his other books, particularly, "A Better World — the Great Schism: Stalmism and the American Intellectuals," O'Neill, who teaches history at Rungers University, is a Cold War liberal. In his view, the Cold War was inevitable, guaranteed by "the Stalinization of Eastern Europe," and he admires Truman for his tough stand against Soviet ambitions. Although he criticizes the way the Korean War was fought by General Douglas MacArthur, ("imperious, strogant, grandiose, theatrical"), he is heartily in favor of United States's intervention on the ground that "Korea was the first instance since the end of World War II when a Communist state attempted to expand through conquest." At home, O'Neill defends the Truman loyalty program as politically necessary: "Had Truman failed to act, Congress would surely have created a worse system," but he deplores the way it turned out in practice and has no liking at all for such Communist-bashing as the "sordid" Hollywood blacklist. In both his credits and his criticisms, O'Neil proves a fairly mainstream chronicler. What ouses his most spirited writing is the postwar burst of energy that sent millions of veterans to school and then into new jobs. While noting the darker side of the decade - "Serism was ignored, racism underplayed and poverty obscured by the general preoccupation with abundance"—he adds in typical extensions."

This can be excused to some extent by the fact.

that no society, however rich, can attend to everything at once."

By its nature, this book, based mainly or the research of others, has a once-over-lightly feel-ing. Nonetheless, "American High" should set readers of a certain age to musing foodly over what it was about the postwar decade that made it the best years of so many American ...

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

BOB Goldwater of Harts-dale, New York, recently ended a two-year term as presi-dent of the Wesuchester (New York) Contract Bridge Association, and went out in style: at the association's life master party last month he won with a 72 percent score in spite of having to find a last-minute substitute partner. On the dia-gramed deal, a hungry West-player tried to penalize Gold-water in two spades and would have vindicated his double if he had led one of his higher trumps and persevered in that wein. The heart queen was led, however, and East took the ace and continued the suit. South won with the king, cashed the diamond ace and led another dismond. He ruffed the next beart lead, ruffed a diamond and led the chib jack.

East covered with the queen, usually a mistake when an honor sequence is led, and saved South a difficult guess. When he covered with the king, West took the ace and returned the suit. West was now reduced to his five trumps, so he had to ruff the next club lead and lead away from his trump queen to give Goldwater his contract.

Last weekend, the Italian and the Spanish Cub championships were taken closer to Naples and Barcelo-12, respectively, by the singular miliance of two familiar showmen. Diego Maradona, hounded by his customary tales of physical and mental turbulance, returned from m unsanctioned trip to Toyko, scored twice for Napoli on the road sgainst Udinese and took his dopted chib one major step closer to its first-ever Italian title. Business as usual for the undis puted genius of his sport. But, as if this were Mexico in high summer instead of Europe in winter, Maradona's headlines were challenged across Europe by a quiet English-

Maradona scores two, Gary Lin-Maragena scores two, one of the eker nails three. No comparison, of Argentine is a creature of meldor-Argentine is a section artistic or dubious (the first on Sunday came from a disputed penalty). The Englishman is swift, silent, predatory; like the Scarlet Pimpernel, he is here and then gone, leaving only the sting behind

You remember a Maradona masterpicee long after you have yet, just as Maradona was denied the golden boot for top scorer at Lineker reminded tens of millions of television viewers late on Saturday that when the stage is set and the time is ripe he will do what soccer players term "the business." Stone-cold sober, Catalans have doubted the quality of this impretentious man bought at a price of almost $4 million. Drunk on his hat-trick against Real Madrid last Saturday, they sang his name down the Ramblas of Barcelona until the carly hours.

A Catalan's first desire is to beat Real Madrid; second is to win the Spanish championship.
Two more foreigners, Mexican

Hugo Sanchez and Argentine Jorge Valdano, made a spirited fight of it, but the final score of 3-2 gives Lineker (sorry, Barcelona) every chance of regaining the league title.
You or I might have put the finishing touch to any of Lineker's three goals. But, in his improving Spanish and his typically under-stated way, the man himself suggests getting there is the thing: "As any striker will tell you, there's nothing wrong with good timing " he says. "Barcelona vs. Real Madrid is a very big game, but while the match goes on I never think of anything except playing. Fine. If it were so simple, wouldn't we all make our first million just by turning up, making ing on the button? Look. We know that a runner or a javelin thrower or a skier gets the best out of himself at a world championship or an Olympics. It is axiomatic that he works up to peak performance for that particular day in a two- or four-year cycle. He contends with climate, with illness or injury, but that is his challenge.

Yet in a team sport, it seems to defeat the very logic of planning and of sharing that one man should, time and again, time his effort so much better than all the rest.

Maradona, we have to accept, is born of the stuff of genins. He cannot, when he is in top form, be stopped by normal strategy and not always by the abnormal attempts of thugs to break his stubby little limbs into even smaller bits and pieces.

What you do with Maradona is inspire him — some days by sweet-ness and light, some days by work-ing with or against the blatent contrariness in his nature. The year is long and sapping after a World Cup, and the profits from Maradona Producciones profits (upward of $4.5 million since Mexico alone) cannot keep on stimulating him.

So if the prima donna plays a little hooky by defying Napoli or-ders and risking an ankle injury to play in another of his UNICEF charity games on the far side of the world, what do you do? You dispatch your club medic, one who is Argentine himself and has (somenes) direct access to Maradona's Treat the mind, and the ankle can take care of itself. But Lineker remains harder to fathom. He, too, was injured before Saturday's crucial game. I would not be the least surprised to hear that he received a few shots of Novocain, the play-now-pay-later painkiller which, at his level, is an

back in Naples - on his re-insidious part of the package. Lineker also performed without his normal partner, the volatile Welshman Mark Hughes, who was suspended for persistent misconduct (showing how hard it can be to get the timing right in this sport). And yet Lineker, whose knack of scoring grows with the weight of expectation placed on him, scores once, twice, a third time against some of the best defenders in the world - and whose minds had been applies a little pressure to do some-thing special for his people — the primed simply to blot him out.

Why? Submit any answers by postcard to Leo Beenhakker, the Dutch coach of Real Madrid, nine times out of ten. He does not know, Lineker does not know - nobody knows - how to define the gift of drifting unseen and unmarked, into scoring situations that no one else's eye detects. Sure, Lineker has the virtue of a workman ready again and again to sprint in hopes of a scoring opporhmity. Sure, he has speed of foot and the courage to shoot in the blink of an eye. But how does he slip defenders whose task is to stick closer than a brother? Speak to West Germany's Gerd

Miller, to Italy's Paolo Rossi, to Hungary's Ferenc Puskas, to England's Jimmy Greaves. Ask why they, never genuises in the visible way that Maradona or Pele have been, could not stop scoring. They cannot explain. It comes product of glorious uncertainty. Probe Maradona's mind and you will find, lurking there somewhere, the specter of Lineker. Throughout Italian soccer, the world's No. I socthe rising star Vialli of Sampdoria is merely a future in the making. But Lineker? You seek to lose him here, to lose him there, but this damned clusive Pimpernel strikes

Super-Giant Victory Gives Walliser 2d Gold Medal

CRANS-MONTANA, Switzerland - Maria Walliser combined power and speed to beat Swiss teammate Michela Figini and become the first double-gold medal winner of the world Alpine ski championships by winning the women's super-giant slalom here

The victory gave Switzerland five titles in the competition's first six events, tying the record set by Austria in Chamonix, France, in 1962 (when there were only six ttiles at stake). Only the men's combined victory of Luxembourg's Marc Girardelli has broken the home-team grip here; with four races remaining, the Swiss seem certain to break the 25-year-old record. Walliser, who also finished one-two with Figini in Sunday's downhill, was fourth out of the gate and set an unbeatable time of 1 minute, 19.17 seconds through the 39 gates of the 0.9-mile (1.44-kilometer) Chetzeron course. Figini won her second silver

Ben Lexcen, the madeap design-er who hatched the idea for Austrahis It's winged keel, which turned the yachting world upside down in 1983, has looked on in pain as raices to Stars & Stripes. With Dennis Conner needing only one more victory to reclaim the prize Lexcen worked a decade and a half to get, the designer wonders whether it was worth the effort.

"Fifteen years of work for one night of fun," he said sheepishly. "Never again." Lexcen, who designed the unsuccessful Australia III and IV for this cup, said the big problem Kookaburra III is running up against is Conner himself. "He's one of the best sailors in the world, that's the bloody problem."

Lexcen said Conner has the Kookaburra III crew psyched out. "You watch them. They're all looking over their shoulders at Dennis's boat. He's got them intimidated."

Oxford Settles Rowing Row

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches OXFORD, England - Oxford University's rowing squad, cloaked in British sporting tradition, was almost torn apart by an angry U.S. oarsman who hurled soup at his coach. But harmony apparently returned Monday, allowing Oxford to field a strong eight-man team against Cambridge in March for the 1987 edition of the legendary boat race. The dispute had its roots in Oxford's importing world-class U.S. rowers to bolster its crew following its loss last year in the 158-year-old race of 44 miles (6.83 kilometers) on the River

. Differences in rowing style and training techiques led to bitter arguments as practice intensified for the March 28 meeting. At one point Chris Clark, one of five Americans on the Oxford squad, threw a cup of tomato soup at Coach Daniel Topolski, Clark, 27, a University of California graduate doing postgraduate work at Oxford, was thrown off the 20-member squad a week ago. He had been expected to be one of Oxford's eight oarsmen in the race. "His potential is wonderful, proved to be too destructive."

Said Clark: "The problem is that Dan has been around for 14 years and really made this race his own. He's forgotten it's a race for carsmen."

After Clark, who competed in the 1985 world championships, was dismissed, seven top candidates for the eight-man squad - four Americans and three Britons - refused to The mutiny caused a major stir in Britain, where the race is a leading sporting event. A reserve crew agreed to take their places if necessary. "These Americans are guests here," said one reserve. "They should understand that." Clark's dismissal by Oxford Boat Club President Donald MacDonald, who most likely will get his seat in the race, had the overwhelming approval of Oxford's coaches. And the rebel oarsmen, saying Monday they had changed their minds, agreed to return to training and will compete. One of them called the decision an "act of good faith."

Topolski said he was "thrilled," and scheduled a meeting that was expected to heal rifts triggered by Clark's but he has to be handled like a hot-house plant," said Topolski of Clark. "His presence has dismissal. "Let's hope we can get on now and win the boat race," he said. (UPI, WP)

"I don't like to bundle up and I move around a lot in my job," said Bob Schwartz, a fabric salesman, who reaches appointments on miserable, rainy days" by scuttling beneath the garment district.

"Avoiding crowds is one of the ways to survive in New York," said Barry Lewis, a tour guide, whose escapes include a midblock march through buildings from Saks Fifth Avenue to the Trump Tower. And Gene Russianoff, a lawyer, feels savvy making his indoor way from Chambers and Church Streets to the gates of Battery Park City. "On snowy, bitter days," he added, "this arcane knowledge comes in very

In Manhattan — the best borough for burrowing — aficionados miss the tunnel under 33d Street from Avenue of the Americas to Seventh Avenue, It has been shut since 1980 for renovations, which are not expected to begin before next year. And lobby wayfarers find this or that door locked, presumably for security. But the main catacombs have stayed pretty much intact. Rockefeller Center's can take a traveler from 47th to 53d Streets, and Grand Central's from 41st to 46th. The cavernous IND subway leads - without a fare from 35th to 40th Streets beneath Avenue of the Americas, and from Chambers Street to the World Trade Center, which has its own labyrinth. However, negotiating their intricacies - and more or less linking them with building lobbies

- can dannt the uninitiated. "You have to have chutzpah," Schwartz, the fabric salesman, explained as he showed some of his undercover ways. Arriving in Pennvivania Station from his home in Rockville Centre, New York, he pensed at a seemingly thriving Martinson Coffee House in the main concourse. Commuters stream into it - but don't stop, brisk, winding walk past tables of breakfasters, through the opposite door to a passageway. A right turn, then another and voile, a service elevator that leads to No. 1 Penn

"I don't wan't to walk with 1,000 people," Schwartz explained, con-tinuing — well, outside, but only long enough to reach the 33d Street entrance of Macy's. Past men's shirts, a right toward cosmetics, and out on Broadway and 35th, but for only a few steps, to descend to the IND line. And then - an underground walk to 40th and Aveone of the Americas.

"You could skateboard here," he suggested before plunging into a long wide passageway walled in white tile under the Avenue of the Ambience can affect his choice particularly above ground, he said, noting that "there's usually sculpture in 104 West 40th. There are lobbies that are gorgeous. Also swayed by aesthetics is Justin Ferate, a tour guide, who notes that diving and darting do not al-ways save you steps. "I call them longcuts," said Ferate, who strides from the Villard Houses on Madison Avenue and 50th Street "like I Russianoff, a lawyer for a public interest group, sometimes passes through the Woolworth Building to enjoy its mosaics, although it is not the most efficient way from his Murray Street office near City Hall to government offices in the World Trade Center. He also detours just to explore, he said, leading the way to the Chambers Street end of an IND passageway for a nine-block walk to the center. Continuing into its No. 1 lobby and through it to the Vista International Hotel, he emerged briefly on West Street near Liberty Street. Then Russianoff disappeared into a covered walkway to arrive in triumph in Battery Park City.

For Russianoff, "Part of the thrill is seeing how far you can go until somebody says, You can't go here." Or, as Lewis, the tour guide, put it, "If somebody on the other end says What are you doing here? you deal with that then. You have to have a certain amount of temerity. There's no such thing as a closed door."

Russell Baker will be back Friday.

The Electricity Of Neeme Järvi

'The only way you need to talk is through the hands; the music must feel comfortable.'

By Andrew Clark GOTEBORG, Sweden - Estonian-born, Russiantrained, and American-based, Neeme Jarvi spends most of his time conducting symphony or-chestras in Sweden and Scotland. When the Soviet authorities allowed him to emigrate from Esto-nia in 1980, Järvi's name was unknown in the West. Seven years later, he has established a reputa-tion in Europe and the United States for his wide-ranging musi-cal sympathies, and his gift for drawing performances of vitality and spontaneity from the orchestras he conducts.

Much of that reputation is based on his prolific output of recordings, currently running at about 25 a year. But Jarvi's popularity with rank-and-file orchessicians stems not just from the lucrative commercial contracts he brings; they also value his visits as a break from routine. Dapper, amusing and capable of charming the orchestra as much as the audience, he knows what he wants from the music, and how to get it with the minimum of

Over the next six weeks, Jarvi, 48, will be breaking new ground as he takes the Göteborg Sym-phony Orchestra on its first world our. When he became its principal conductor in 1982, the orchestra rarely moved outside its home territory. In the intervening years it has negotiated a sponsorship deal enabling an increase in persound from 80 to 100, toured the United States, won several prizes for its complete Sibelius recordings and landed a long-term contract to record Scandinavian music for Deutsche Grammophon.

Järvi's effect on the Glasgow-based Scottish National Orchestra, which he joined as musical director in 1984, has been broadly similar. He is credited with improving the orchestra's sound and the size of its audiences, and has plunged into the major choral repertoire and heavily scored late Romantics to considerable ac-

Järvi says the energy he has expended on all these projects is in part a reaction to the limited contunities of his earlier career. His pedigree is unusual. His elder brother, a percussion player, introduced him to the xylophone at their home in Estonia, one of the three Baltic republics annexed by the Soviet Union after World War II. After choosing music as a career, Jarvi's second home became the Leningrad Philharmonic, whose rehearsals and concerts he attended compulsively during his training under Nikolai Rabinovich and Yevgeny Mravinsky at the Leningrad State to the Estonian capital, Tallinn, Jārvi held almost every conducting post his home country could offer, and was also invited to conduct in Moscow. But it was not enough. "I was not allowed to travel abroad. The musicians in my orchestra never had a chance to see or hear other styles and improve their own standards. Salaries were low, musical instruments old, and we couldn't make recordings. The ceiling for artistic fulfillment was low. Worst of all, it was the politicians who dictated what we should play."

In the 20 years after his return

Järvi's emigration — he is now an American citizen and lives with his wife, Lillia, and their three children in New Jersey has allowed him to fulfill most of his artistic dreams. But there are new battles to be fought. He is proud to be Estonian, sad to be persona non grata in his home-land, and indignant that orchestral managements in the West regard him as Soviet in origin.

Järvi: "Think of what will excite the musicians,"

Guest engagements with the major German and Anstrian orchestras have been slow to materialize "They seem to think I'm some kind of Russian emigre or exile, and it hurts a bit" - and the Metropolitan Opera has found him useful only for Russian classics like "Engene Onegin" and "Khovanshchina." Järvi is quick to point out that in his 13 years as opera chief at Tallinn, he conducted only one Russian opera, devoting practically all his time to Verdi, Puccini and Richard

In his concert work, however he has never hidden his love and flair for the Russian symphonic repertoire, and he has used his rowing reputation to champion sser-known Scandinavian composers like Franz Berwald, Johan Severin Svendsen and Vilhelm Engen Stenhammar, as well as some of his Estonian compatri-

In Sweden he has just finished recording the complete orchestral music of Eduard Tubin (1905-1983), an Estonian whose symphonic output Järvi puts on equal terms with Sibelius and Prokofiev; and his programs in Scotland

by Arvo Part, who emigrated from Estonia the same year as

About his own approach to conducting Jarvi talks sparingly: "Most important is to have a good technique — those who don't have to talk a lot. The only way you need to talk is through the hands; the music must feel comfortable. It's the same as painting — you must be clear, smooth and expressive. There must be some electricity from your hands and personality, which communicates itself immediately to the orchestra.

"As for the music itself, I'm not content to do just what is 'right.' We also have to think of what will excite the musicians in the music

"It's the best time in my life when I come to a rehearsal or concert with enthusiasm, and it helps to see enthusiastic people around me. That's when we make

The Göteborg Symphony Or-chestra begins its world tour with concerts in Singapore today and Thursday. It then gives five con-certs in Hong Kong nine in Japan and 13 in the United States, ending and 13 in the United States, ending at Avery Fisher Hall, New York, March 15.

Globe Theatre Victory

The council of the London borough of Southwark has given planning permission for the American actor and director Sam Wansmaker to start his £13 million (about $20 million) project to rebuild Wil-liam Shakespeare's Globe Theatre on its original site on the south bank of the River Thames. The council had wanted to use the unmarked site for housing. Last June, Southwark council agreed to drop its objections after a court action, but planning permission had not, until now, been forthcoming. "I faltered a lot of times, but I never gave up hope," Wanamaker, 67, said. "I always believed we would win in the end." A spokesman for Wanamaker's International Shakespeare Globe Centre said foundation work on the 1,000-seat Globe would begin in July. He added: "The plan is to have the new Globe ready by April 1992, with an opening on April 23 that year — Shake-speare's birthday."

Prince Edward, who recently resigned from the Royal Marines, has en named patron of the British National Youth Theater. The 22year-old prince, youngest child of Queen Elizabeth II, will not be involved in running the amateur company, Buckingham Palace said. However, Edward, who acted in several student productions as an undergraduate at Cambridge University, will be invited to be closely involved in the company's activities and productions, said Bryan Forbes, president of the theater.

Fidel Castro, 60, who gave up smoking in 1985 to boost a health campaign, says he still dreams of smoking the big cigars that became part of his image. Castro told a pathering at the residence of the Spanish ambassador in Havana last week that he sometimes dreams about cigars but that his pledge not to smoke wins out in the end. According to a tape recording of his remarks obtained by Reuters, Castro said: "Three times I've dreamed that I am smoking. In fact, just last night I dreamed that suddenly I had a big cigar in my hand, then I said, 'Holy mackerel.' And I let fly a big exclamation: 'Tm smoking, by golly."

Amer Arama, senior political adviser for the UN Special Committee Against Apartheid in New York. Simon was included for going to South Africa in 1985 and recording a half-dozen sones for "Graceland" with black musicians in the coun-try. The musicians were paid triscale, and Simon has since bey, after several of them to the Unite xchanges. to perform.
